

THE FAMILY EVERYTHING DRIVE

Your will says who gets everything.

Nothing says where everything is.

Your documents are built to answer one question well: who receives what. They are not built to answer the questions your family actually stands in the kitchen asking — which institution holds which account, which policies exist at all, and how anyone gets into a locked phone that every other account resets through.

Most families answer that with a notebook in a drawer. It's readable by anyone who walks through the house, and it's out of date within a year.

What Final Peace is

A small key-shaped drive with a guided, plain-English program on it. You fill it in at home, at your own pace. It holds:

- ✓ Every account, and which institution holds it
- ✓ Policies, pensions, and the numbers that matter
- ✓ Where the important papers actually are
- ✓ How to get into things — devices, safes, the storage unit
- ✓ Who to call: your advisor, your attorney, the people you trust
- ✓ Your wishes, in your own words

Sealed until it's needed

Nothing touches the internet. No cloud, no account, nothing to renew — it all stays on the drive, in your home. It opens only when two printed codes, held by people you choose, are brought together.

What your family would otherwise have to find

These are the things that are genuinely unrecoverable — not inconvenient, but gone, because they existed only in one person's memory:

- ✓ An account at an institution nobody thought to call
- ✓ A policy or pension from an employer decades ago
- ✓ The safe deposit box — which bank, and who may open it
- ✓ A storage unit: the facility, the unit number, the gate code. Unpaid units can have their contents sold
- ✓ The passcode to the phone every other account resets through
- ✓ Which professional actually knows the situation

Built for real people, not computer people. Extra-large text, plain English, no typing tricks. It runs from the drive itself, with no account to create and nothing to keep paying for — so it still opens years from now, on the same time horizon as your other documents.
