

THE FAMILY EVERYTHING DRIVE

*Your will says who gets everything.
Nothing says where everything is.*

The gap nobody plans for

Your documents are built to answer one question well: who receives what. They aren't built to answer the questions your family actually stands in the kitchen asking — which institution holds which account, which policies exist at all, and how anyone gets into a locked phone that every other account resets through.

Most families answer that with a notebook in a drawer. It's readable by anyone who walks through the house, and it's out of date within a year.

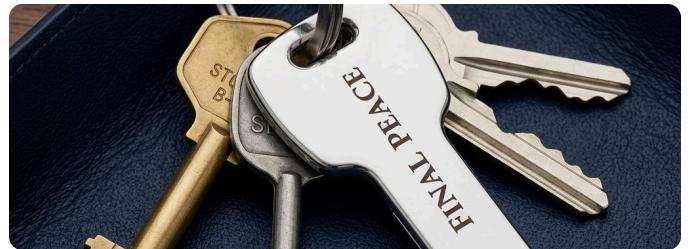

One key. Two codes. Held by people you choose.

What Final Peace is

A small key-shaped drive with a guided, plain-English program on it. You fill it in at home, at your own pace. It holds:

- ✓ Every account, and which institution holds it
- ✓ Policies, pensions, and the numbers that matter
- ✓ Where the important papers actually are
- ✓ How to get into things — devices, safes, the storage unit
- ✓ Who to call: your advisor, your attorney, the people you trust
- ✓ Your wishes, in your own words

A real engraved key that lives on the keyring.

The things that are genuinely unrecoverable

Not inconvenient — gone, because they existed only in one person's memory: an account at an institution nobody thought to call · a policy or pension from an employer decades ago · the safe deposit box, and who may open it · a storage unit's facility, unit number and gate code, where unpaid units can have their contents sold · the passcode to the phone every other account resets through.

Sealed until it's needed, and built for real people. Nothing touches the internet — no cloud, no account, nothing to renew. It opens only when two printed codes, held by people you choose, are brought together. Extra-large text, plain English, no typing tricks, and no subscription to outlive — so it still opens years from now, on the same time horizon as your other documents.
